Admissions requirements

There are standard minimum entry requirements for all undergraduate courses. Students are advised to check the standard requirements for the most up-to-date information. For most courses a decision will be made on the basis of your application form alone. However, for some courses the selection process may include an interview to demonstrate your strengths in addition to any formal entry requirements. More information can be found here: <https://www.westminster.ac.uk/study/undergraduate/how-to-apply>

Recognition of Prior Learning

Applicants with prior certificated or experiential learning at the same level of the qualification for which they wish to apply are advised to visit the following page for further information:

Aims of the programme

Welcome to the exciting world of the BA Languages Programme at our historic institution! As an undergraduate student, you'll combine the study of a language - Arabic, Chinese, French, or Spanish - with another captivating subject: Translation, International Communication, English, Linguistics, International Business, or International Relations.

Immerse yourself in a dynamic academic environment that fosters language proficiency, cultural understanding, and interdisciplinary exploration. Our carefully designed courses aim to equip you with the skills and knowledge necessary to excel in both your chosen language and complementary subject. Delve into the fascinating connections between languages, cultures, and societies, gaining a comprehensive understanding of their intricate interplay.

By joining our BA Languages Programme, you'll not only gain important language and cultural skills but also contribute to a learning environment that values diversity, inclusivity, and personal growth. We are committed to providing you with the resources, support, and opportunities to thrive in an ever-changing and diverse world by strengthening your intercultural competence.

We foster an inclusive learning environment that values difference, encourages active participation, and considers your unique needs as an individual student. Our course team is dedicated to promoting equality and equity through our curriculum, teaching practices, and learning spaces. We provide accessible materials across all modules and employ a range of assessment modes that allow you to showcase your skills and tailor your learning experience to your preferences.

Our combined degree programmes aim to cultivate student autonomy and develop graduate qualities such as effective communication, personal management, flexibility, analytical and critical thinking, teamwork, and originality.

International and Professional Opportunities

One of the highlights of our BA Languages Programme is the opportunity to embark on a transformative international experience. This can be tailored to your personal circumstances, and flexible opportunities could include short fully funded field trips or summer schools, a semester spent studying abroad in the second year, and/or a year-long international experience after your second year of study.

The international field trips usually last 5-days, are open to all students to apply. The destinations and activities change yearly but are led by members of staff with cultural and linguistic knowledge of the destination. And the best bit? The trips are entirely free-of-charge to you!

The semester abroad is available to you when you are in your second year of study, and you will study the same subjects of your degree at a partner institution, organised by Westminster. The year abroad is available to you when you complete your second year of study, you can either participate in an exchange where you study at a partner institution (organised by Westminster), or organise your own work placement abroad with support from Westminster.

Your time abroad will not only enhance your language fluency but also foster intercultural awareness, self-reliance, and invaluable global connections, making you a mobile and transnational citizen. Imagine the possibilities of studying at one of our partner institutions in Europe, Canada, China, Jordan, Latin America, or Morocco. For those seeking a shorter international experience, either instead of or in addition to the year abroad, we also offer a semester-long international study placement in your second year. These experiences allow you to broaden your horizons, embrace new cultures, and expand your language skills in a more compact timeframe.

Alternatively, if you prefer to gain professional experience within the UK, you can opt for a UK-based year or semester in industry. This rare opportunity provides real-world experience of a professional workplace, allowing you to acquire practical skills, build a network of contacts and get a head start in your career.

As you embark on your BA Languages journey, rest assured that your international or professional experience, coupled with advanced linguistic and cultural competence, will set you apart in the eyes of employers. Graduates who have honed their language skills and developed a global perspective are highly sought-after in today's interconnected world.

Join us in our commitment to producing articulate, resourceful, creative, and critically aware graduates of languages and cultures. We aspire to prepare you for success in diverse intercultural and professional environments, equipping you with the necessary tools to thrive in your chosen field.

We look forward to welcoming you to our vibrant community, where languages, cultures, and opportunities converge to shape your future. Explore the endless possibilities that await you at Westminster!

Employment and further study opportunities

University of Westminster graduates will be able to demonstrate the following five Graduate Attributes:

- Critical and creative thinkers
- Literate and effective communicator
- Entrepreneurial
- Global in outlook and engaged in communities
- Social, ethically and environmentally aware

University of Westminster courses capitalise on the benefits that London as a global city and as a major creative, intellectual and technology hub has to offer for the learning environment and experience of our students.

In all of our BA Languages courses, we prioritise your career development by integrating work-based learning in our teaching methods and assessment, as well as through the Employing Humanities programme. This programme is delivered in tutorials and offers various opportunities for career development, including support with self-auditing, interview techniques, job and placement search strategies, postgraduate application processes, self-branding and mentoring. Students are guided through the Westminster Employability Award scheme, with an aim to achieving Bronze in the first year, Silver in the second year and Gold or Platinum in the final year. We actively engage with employers from different sectors and diverse backgrounds, involving them in curriculum design and encouraging their participation in career education, guidance and events at the University. Graduates from the Languages programmes have pursued careers in PR and communication, management, law, teaching, journalism, tourism, banking, accountancy, marketing, civil and diplomatic services, development work, translation, interpreting, as well as creating their own businesses and pursuing postgraduate study.

Our degrees are designed to equip you with the transferable skills, intercultural competences and international outlook needed in the 21st-century workplace. As such, employability is embedded across the Languages' curriculum and aims to highlight the practical applications of humanities skills in a wide variety of fields. Reflecting our long-term commitment to your career, the Employing Humanities programme is divided into stages at each level of study, mapping onto the CAREER pathway:

C is for Capture and sharing our Employing Humanities programme with prospective students at Open Days and on the website.

A is for Arrivals and introducing new students to the Careers & Employability Service and Employing Humanities programme during Arrivals Week.

R is for Reflection when first-year students record existing professional experience, identify skills gaps and ways to the fill them.

E is for Experience of real-world employment activities and problem-solving in the second year, when the 'Humanities Hackathon' takes place and major employers provide students with a live brief, joining them in a day of competitive pitching interspersed with networking (former organisations include Black Lives in Music, the BBC, Channel 4, FT Live, Hallmark, LVMH, Meta, Mind and WaterAid).

E is for Employment-readiness in the final year, when tutors and mentors support students to springboard into the world of work upon graduation

R is for Return and encouraging recent graduates to return to the University and "give back" by sharing their workplace experiences, challenges and lessons through student mentoring, careers' talks, etc.

There are also numerous on-campus and external employment and volunteering opportunities supported by the Employability Director and publicised through a dedicated Employing Humanities platform. This will keep you up-to-date with openings as they happen, from international placements to teaching taster schemes and in-house Student Ambassador and Digital Ambassador roles, where you could get paid for managing the Humanities Blog or our HOMELandS research group's social media channels.

It doesn't end there. Our lecturers will be happy to provide you with references and advice about further study; and our helpful Careers & Employability Service work closely with our Employability Director to provide you with tailored support and practical advice for three years after you've graduated!

What will you be expected to achieve?

Learning outcomes are statements on what successful students have achieved as the result of learning. These are threshold statements of achievement the learning outcomes broadly fall into four categories:

- The overall knowledge and understanding you will gain from your course (KU)
- Graduate attributes are characteristics that you will have developed during the duration of your course (GA)
- Professional and personal practice learning outcomes are specific skills that you will be expected to have gained on successful completion of the course (PPP)
- Key transferable skills that you will be expected to have gained on successful completion of the course. (KTS)

How will you learn?

Learning methods

At Westminster, learning goes far beyond traditional lectures. As an undergraduate student, you'll engage in a variety of interactive learning experiences designed to stimulate your intellectual growth with a lot of teaching taking place in small groups. From seminars, tailored tutorials, oral classes, practical sessions, and workshops to task-based exercises, peer presentations, and professional simulations, you'll encounter a dynamic mix of learning methods that foster critical thinking, problem-solving skills, teamwork, and independent learning. We strive to eliminate barriers to your learning and collaborate with you to create an inclusive educational experience. The variety of our learning approaches and assessment types mean that every student's strengths are catered for.

Languages courses at Westminster are distinctive in the amount of language-focused contact time we offer, the combination of cultural studies with language learning, and the professionalised activities and assessments. While contact time with lecturers serves to introduce new concepts and information, it also serves as a springboard for your own academic development. As you progress through your studies, you'll gradually take on more independent work, engaging in tasks such as producing your own digital content for diverse audiences, critically reflecting on contemporary issues, and creating your own research project.

As a demanding discipline, language learning requires a high level of engagement, and the benefits you gain from our extensive in-class language learning provision are reliant on your independent commitment. However, your learning will be supported throughout your degree by a team of lecturers who will know you by name. Regular, small-group, academic tutorials form the basis of your support and are tailored to your specific course and individual needs. Much of your learning will also take place outside formal contact hours. You'll have access to all class materials via the Virtual Learning Environment (Blackboard Ultra), our well-resourced libraries – both on campus and online – and the University's wide range of study skills workshops and one-to-one appointments.

We also acknowledge and work with generative artificial intelligence (GenAI). While recognising the transformative potential of AI in learning, we emphasise the fundamental importance of academic integrity. The use of AI tools by our students to automatically generate assessments is considered a breach of academic standards, hindering the development of critical thinking skills and undermining the educational process. However, we are also mindful of the opportunities presented by AI and the ways in which we can teach you to get the most from it, helping you to understand its uses for idea generation and its support in research and writing, as well as exploring its limitations and risks, which we do in all modules.

Sustainable Development Goals

Sustainable development has become central to learning and teaching in higher education, reflecting the increasing wider social awareness and recognition of sustainability agendas. The University of Westminster is committed to the United Nations' 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

Sustainability is not only about climate change and other environmental questions, but also encompasses a broader range of goals and aspirations to improve social justice, poverty, health, and education at local and global levels. Sustainability agendas offer new lenses through which to view the relationships between social, cultural, economic, and environmental challenges, which makes them highly relevant to the study of language, culture, society, and intercultural communication.

Westminster adopted UN target 4.7 as a shared university goal in June 2023. UNESCO has published resources for educators developing learning objectives around sustainable development. These outline eight core competencies that higher education should enable learners to develop, in order to progress sustainability objectives. These competencies can be understood as ways of thinking, ways of practising, and ways of being. Our courses emphasise four of these competencies:

Normative competency: the abilities to understand and reflect on the norms and values that underlie one's actions; and to negotiate sustainability values, principles, goals, and targets, in a context of conflicts of interests and trade-offs, uncertain knowledge and contradictions.

Collaboration competency: the abilities to learn from others; to understand and respect the needs, perspectives and actions of others (empathy); to understand, relate to and be sensitive to others (empathic leadership); to deal with conflicts in a group; and to facilitate collaborative and participatory problem solving.

Critical thinking competency: the ability to question norms, practices and opinions; to reflect on own one's values, perceptions and actions; and to take a position in the sustainability discourse.

Self-awareness competency: the ability to reflect on one's own role in the local community and (global) society; to continually evaluate and further motivate one's actions; and to deal with one's feelings and desires.

Teaching methods

Our teaching methods are designed to actively engage you in your learning journey. Practical sessions, including weekly small-group oral classes, focus on developing conversational skills, linguistic mediation and intercultural communication. Seminars typically involve group viewings of audiovisual media, analyses of written and/or spoken words, images or artefacts, Q&A sessions, debates, role plays, quizzes, short staff presentations, glossary-building activities, as well as scenario- and task-based group work. Through these hands-on sessions, you'll actively participate and receive immediate feedback, cultivating a supportive environment that values diverse experiences and opinions. Plenaries, led by subject specialists who are all published researchers, offer core expert knowledge on both contemporary and historical sociocultural phenomena. For students working on their major Final Year Project, individual supervision is provided alongside workshops and tutorials to guide you through the process.

Supporting the University of Westminster's Black Lives Matter Commitment Plan as well as the wider Equality, Diversity and Inclusivity agenda, our courses have been developed using an inclusive approach that ensures you will have a learning experience that respects diversity, encourages active participation, considers students' varying needs, encourages and enables you to tailor your learning according to your career and individual aspirations, and equips you with the skills to work in a changing and diverse world. The course team is fully committed to equality, diversity and inclusivity in the curriculum, in teaching, learning and assessment practices, and in our learning spaces. We aim to eliminate all arbitrary barriers to your learning and to work with you to achieve that aim.

Our aims are underpinned by three principles:

- provision of an inclusive learning environment, both physical and digital;
- Diversification and inclusivity of the curriculum;
- provision of diverse and inclusive co-and extra-curricular activities.

Practically, you will see our commitment working in the following ways, for example:

Inclusive learning environment:

- accessible materials are provided across all modules;
- a range of assessment modes is employed, and, for example in core language modules students will produce several pieces of work and select those that they wish to enter for summative assessment.

Diversification of the curriculum

- The diversification of the curriculum is at the heart of what we do. Modules such as London Lives: Migrant London (School-wide elective); Multilingual e-Collaboration; Identities on the Move; Sex Strike: Gender and Protest; and Professionalising International Communication explore a range of case studies and real-world material from global and transnational contexts. Key concepts within the themes of identity, culture, migration and memory encourage critical reflection on personal positionality and lived experiences. In line with our inclusive ethos, the reading lists
- the theoretical approaches engaged with on the modules include areas such as Queer Theory, Feminism, and Critical Race Theory, all of which enable students to reflect on their own positionality in relation to others.
- reading lists that accompany modules have been carefully curated to include diverse voices which have long been silenced in traditional academic settings.

Diverse and inclusive co- and extra-curricular activities:

- the choice of professionals for practice-based seminars will prioritise issues of diversity and inclusion across the range of professions and industries relevant to the course;
- fieldwork and study visit locations will be selected in consultation with students.

For each module, teaching staff will be available to provide individual support, and module leaders all hold weekly online and in-person office hours during term-time, when you can drop in for advice. Your Academic Tutor will help you with essential academic skills, such as essay-writing tips, finding reliable scholarly sources, referencing methods and responding to feedback. Academic Tutors, who you see for an hour every week in your first year, will also assist you in making important decisions, such as choosing option modules and determining your Project topic. Your Course Leader will provide overall support and guidance, while your Personal Tutor will offer pastoral support and address any personal issues that may arise during your studies.

In short, the teaching methods on our BA Languages Programme are designed to create an inclusive, stimulating and supportive learning environment that empowers you to actively engage in your education and reach your full potential.

Assessment methods

Assessment plays a crucial role in building your knowledge and skills, making connections between modules and disciplines, and nurturing your independent study habits. "Formative" assessments help you to develop as a learner and prepare you for "summative" assessments, which contribute to your module grade. Formative assessments may involve written or oral feedback from peers and lecturers, whereas summative assessments receive formally recorded written or spoken feedback highlighting the strengths of your work and providing clear advice for improvement.

Assessments for language skills include oral presentations, simulated interviews, listening tasks, professional adaptation exercises, transcription and dictation, grammar and computer-based tests, summarising, paraphrasing, translating, interpreting and subtitling. Other assessments may comprise presentations, posters, personal reflections, visual analyses, portfolios, essays, blogs, podcasts, professional simulations, community-based project work, and wikis. For each assessment, you will receive guidance, preparation, and feedback to facilitate your progress.

All assessments that contribute to final grades are evaluated based on clear assessment criteria outlined in module proformas. These criteria directly align with the module's learning outcomes and are used to assess submitted work and provide timely feedback. The marking process adheres to rigorous quality mechanisms to ensure fair and consistent academic judgement. Feedback is delivered through various channels and stages, including responses to assessments, questions in seminars and tutorials, and guidance during project supervision. Peer-to-peer work with fellow students also provides valuable feedback.

The wide range of assessments is designed to support an inclusive curriculum, allowing you to explore different learning styles and encounter new types of assignments with adequate support. You will therefore develop existing skills while being challenged in new areas.

Language and English

These awards combine the study of Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish and English. They have been designed to enable you to achieve proficiency in your chosen language, develop linguistic and cultural knowledge of the two languages of study, and to build knowledge and understanding of linguistic, literary, and cultural studies. These awards are an opportunity to study languages, literatures, and cultures in an integrated interdisciplinary way, exploring the connections between them and the broader historical, political, and cross-cultural contexts in which they are produced. You will also have the opportunity to consider the theoretical tools of textual, cultural, and linguistic analysis in detail.

You will develop a high level of competence in oral and written communication, proficiency in language transfer skills, and the ability to function linguistically in diverse cultural situations. You will achieve a thorough knowledge of language and culture through comparative, cross-cultural, and interdisciplinary approaches and analysis of the forms and practices of cultural transmission. You will also develop the linguistic strategies, literary knowledge, and intercultural awareness and flexibility essential for effective communication in professional and globalised environments. Overall, the course aims to prepare articulate, discerning, and critically aware scholars of language, literatures, and culture.

Course Structure

This section shows the core and option modules available as part of the course and their credit value. Full-time Undergraduate students study 120 credits per year. Course structures can be subject to change each academic year following feedback from a variety of sources.

Modules are described as:

- Core modules are compulsory and must be undertaken by all students on the course.
- Option modules give you a choice of modules and are normally related to your subject area.
- Electives: are modules from across the either the whole University or your College. Such modules allow you to broaden your academic experience. For example, where electives are indicated you may choose to commence the study of a foreign language alongside your course modules (and take this through to the final year), thereby adding further value to your degree.
- Additional information may also be included above each level for example where you must choose one of two specific modules.

Level 4

Award of Certificate of Higher Education available.

All UG Languages students should be registered on their appropriate language (Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish) World and the Word 40-credit, year-long core module with the exception of:

- Study abroad students on a semester-long exchange: These students should be registered on the appropriate semester-long, 20-credit module: Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish World and the Word 1 (semester 1) or 2 (semester 2).

NB - The option module 'Introduction to Translation 2' is a semester 2 option module available ONLY to intermediate students of French and Spanish

Language and Linguistics

These awards combine the study of Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish and Linguistics. They are designed to enable you to achieve proficiency in your chosen language, enhance your skills in using English, and develop knowledge and understanding of the structure, functions, varieties and usages of language in an integrated and interdisciplinary way, exploring the connections and differences between languages, as well as the broader social, historical, and cross-cultural contexts that shape and change them. You will study the formal features of language, such as syntax, production of meaning, articulation in phonetics and phonology, language acquisition, and the social and political uses of language.

You will develop a high level of competence in oral and written communication, proficiency in language transfer skills, and an ability to function linguistically in diverse cultural situations. You will achieve a thorough knowledge of culture through comparative, cross-cultural, and interdisciplinary approaches and analysis of the forms and practices of cultural transmission. You will also develop the linguistic resources, strategies, intercultural awareness, and flexibility essential for effective communication in professional and globalised environments.

Language and International Business

The BA (Hons) Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish and International Business aims to produce graduates with the knowledge, skills, and experience that will enable them to become practising professionals and function effectively in an international work environment, either in the UK or abroad. The course provides you with an opportunity to study language, culture, and international business in an integrated way, exploring the connections between them and the broader economic, financial, and cross-cultural contexts in which they are produced.

You will develop a high level of competence in oral and written communication, proficiency in language transfer skills, and an ability to function linguistically in diverse professional and business situations. You will achieve a thorough knowledge of culture through comparative, cross-cultural, and interdisciplinary approaches and analysis of the forms and practices of cultural transmission. You will also develop the linguistic resources, strategies, intercultural awareness, and flexibility essential for effective communication in professional and globalised environments, enabling you to contribute proactively to private, public, or 'third' sector 'businesses and organisations, and to the wider communities within which businesses operate.

Language and International Relations

These awards combine the study of Arabic/Chinese/French/Spanish and International Relations. They have been designed to enable you to achieve competence in your chosen language and foster a critical understanding of culture and politics from the perspective of the changing dynamics of global order in world politics. The awards give you the opportunity to study language, culture, and international relations in an integrated way, exploring the connections between them and the broader geo-political and cross-cultural contexts in which they are produced.

You will develop a high level of competence in oral and written communication, proficiency in language transfer skills, and an ability to function linguistically in diverse cultural situations. You will develop the linguistic resources, strategies, intercultural awareness, and flexibility essential for effective communication in professional and globalised environments. You will achieve a thorough knowledge of culture through comparative, cross-cultural, and interdisciplinary approaches and analysis of the forms and practices of cultural transmission. You will also explore the challenges of traditional and emerging geopolitics within contemporary international relations, focusing on the changing configurations of power, privilege, and identity in world politics, and on the exploration of questions of governance, democracy, and human rights in a post-colonial world.

Languages + Translation

These awards focus on the professional contexts of language mediation at a high level of linguistic competence. They have been designed to equip you with in-depth knowledge of language structure, register, textuality, and discourse through the application of linguistic concepts to practice-orientated translation tasks. You will develop a high level of competence in oral and written communication, critical self-reflection, and intercultural awareness, and gain the linguistic and cultural competences appropriate to the level of aspiring translators. Learning activities and assessments are designed to reflect real-world tasks, so you will experience professionally-orientated training in both generic and language-specific skills, knowledge, and competencies, which will allow you to progress to developing a career as a professional translator.

Course Structure

This section shows the core and option modules available as part of the course and their credit value. Full-time Undergraduate students study 120 credits per year. Course structures can be subject to change each academic year following feedback from a variety of sources.

Modules are described as:

- Core modules are compulsory and must be undertaken by all students on the course.
- Option modules give you a choice of modules and are normally related to your subject area.
- Electives: are modules from across the either the whole University or your College. Such modules allow you to broaden your academic experience. For example, where electives are indicated you may choose to commence the study of a foreign language alongside your course modules (and take this through to the final year), thereby adding further value to your degree.
- Additional information may also be included above each level for example where you must choose one of two specific modules.
